Why templates beat a blank Ads Manager

Most local campaigns die in setup: the wrong objective, vague copy, an audience that's too broad. A SideKick template starts from a campaign that already worked for a business like yours.

Questions, answered plainly

What SideKick is, how it works, and what happens to your leads.

What is SideKick Studio?

SideKick is a software platform for small businesses to choose their industry, pick a ready-to-go template, launch faster, and manage leads and follow-up from one system.

Who is SideKick for?

It is built for small service businesses that want a cleaner way to launch offers, manage leads, and keep outreach moving without a bloated tool stack.

How does SideKick work?

Choose your industry, pick a template, customize the essentials, launch, then manage leads and follow-up inside the platform.

What do I get in the free trial?

You get 14 days to explore the template library, test the launch flow, and see how lead management and follow-up work inside SideKick before billing starts.

Do I need to build pages from scratch?

No. SideKick starts you from ready-to-go templates so you can customize the important details instead of building the whole campaign from zero.

Can I manage leads inside SideKick?

Yes. Leads are captured inside the platform so you can view them, update status, and keep the next step clear from one place.

Does SideKick support outreach and follow-up?

Yes. SideKick is built to keep follow-up moving after a lead comes in, so outreach stays tied to the same launch flow instead of getting pushed into a disconnected tool.

The rest you'll learn by trying it.

Start the trial, pick a template, and see how launch, leads, and follow-up fit together.

How SideKick Studios collects, uses, and protects your account information, your campaign data, and the lead data we process on behalf of your business.

Last updated: June 2026

Information we collect

We collect the information needed to run your account and your campaigns:

Account details such as your name, email address, and workspace settings.

Campaign configuration: the templates you use, budgets, schedules, and service areas you set.

Lead data submitted through your Meta lead forms, which we process on your behalf: typically a lead's name, contact details, and message.

Connection data for integrations you authorize, such as Meta, GoHighLevel, or HubSpot.

Basic usage data, such as pages viewed and device information, to keep the product working and improve it.

How we use it

We use this information to:

Operate your workspace, launch and manage the campaigns you configure.

Deliver leads to you through the dashboard, email alerts, CSV export, and the CRM connections you set up.

Send service communications about your account, trial, and billing.

Improve the product and troubleshoot issues.

Lead data belongs to your business

Leads generated by your campaigns are your customer relationships, not ours. We do not sell lead data, use it for our own marketing, or share it across workspaces. When you export or hand leads off to your CRM, you control where that data lives.

Who we share information with

We share information only with:

Service providers that host the platform, store data, or send email on our behalf.

Meta and the CRM platforms you explicitly connect, to run campaigns and deliver leads.

Professional advisors or authorities when the law requires it.

Your rights

You can:

Request access to the personal information we hold about you.

Ask us to correct inaccurate information or delete your account data.

Disconnect any integration at any time from workspace settings.

Contact us with any question about how your data or your leads' data is handled.

Contact

Questions about this policy can be sent through the support form in the app or from the public support page. We respond to every privacy request.

Terms of Service

The agreement between your business and SideKick Studioss: the subscription, the free trial, campaign publishing, and how lead data is handled.

Last updated: June 2026

The service

SideKick Studioss is a software platform that lets businesses launch Meta advertising campaigns from templates, capture the resulting leads, and manage follow-up. By creating an account you agree to these terms on behalf of yourself or the business you represent.

Trial, subscription, and billing

New accounts start with a 14-day free trial of the full platform. If you cancel before the trial ends, you are not charged. After the trial, the subscription renews monthly at the listed price until you cancel. You can cancel at any time from account settings; cancellation takes effect at the end of the current billing period.

Your campaigns and ad spend

Campaigns launched through SideKick run in your own Meta ad account, under your authorization. Ad spend is billed to you by Meta and is separate from your SideKick subscription. You are responsible for the offers, claims, and creative you publish, and for complying with Meta's advertising policies and the laws that apply to your business.

Your data and your leads

Lead data generated by your campaigns belongs to your business. We process it to deliver the service: showing leads in your dashboard, sending alerts, and handing data to integrations you connect. Details are in the Privacy Policy.

Acceptable use

You agree not to:

Run campaigns that are deceptive, unlawful, or violate Meta's advertising policies.

Upload content you do not have the rights to use.

Attempt to access other workspaces, disrupt the service, or resell access without an agreement with us.

Availability and changes

We work to keep SideKick available and improving, and we may add, change, or retire features over time. If we make a change that materially reduces what your subscription includes, we will tell you before your next renewal.

Liability

To the fullest extent allowed by law, SideKick Studios is not responsible for indirect or incidental losses arising from use of the platform, including campaign performance, lead quality, or outages of third-party services such as Meta. Our liability is limited to the subscription fees you paid in the twelve months before the claim, unless the law requires otherwise.

Contact

Questions about these terms can be sent through the support form in the app or from the public support page.

Getting Started

What SideKick is and how the platform is organized

SideKick is a campaign platform for launching and managing marketing activity, while external CRMs handle long-term lead management.

Updated June 2026

5 min read

What SideKick is built for

SideKick helps businesses move faster from idea to live campaign. The product is focused on campaign setup, launch, previewing, performance tracking, and integrations that keep the workflow connected.

SideKick is not designed to replace a full CRM. Instead, it handles campaign operations and hands leads off to connected CRM systems such as GoHighLevel or HubSpot.

Create and manage campaigns

Start from ready-to-use templates

Launch Meta campaign flows faster

Track campaign performance

Send Meta Lead Form submissions to connected CRMs

How the main product areas work

Home shows a broad view of launch activity and current workspace health.

Campaigns is where you see drafts, live campaigns, and day-to-day campaign activity.

Performance keeps reporting separate from lead handling, so you can review outcomes without turning SideKick into a CRM inbox.

Workspace Settings is where you manage workspace identity, branding, integrations, and other setup details.

What happens to leads

For Meta Lead Form campaigns, SideKick captures the form submission, normalizes the data, and delivers it to the connected CRM destinations for that workspace.

That means SideKick stays focused on marketing operations while your CRM remains the place for pipeline stages, follow-up ownership, and long-term customer management.

Note:

If multiple CRM providers are connected for a workspace, SideKick sends eligible leads to each connected provider and logs each delivery independently.

Workspaces

How workspaces, switching, and workspace branding work

Workspaces keep campaigns, connected accounts, branding, and CRM handoff settings grouped for each business or operating unit.

Updated June 2026

What a workspace controls

A workspace is the operating context for your campaigns. It keeps the business identity, connected Meta account details, connected CRM destinations, and campaign records in one place.

When you switch workspaces, SideKick updates the campaigns, settings, and integrations you are viewing so you are always working inside the right business context.

Workspace name and brand identity

Workspace logo and imagery

Connected Meta assets

Connected CRM accounts

Campaign records and related performance data

How to create or switch workspaces

Use the workspace switcher in the top-left area of the app to move between existing workspaces or create a new one.

When you create a new workspace, start by setting the name and basic business profile so campaigns and connected assets reflect the right brand from the beginning.

1

Open the workspace switcher from the app header.

2

Select an existing workspace or choose New workspace.

3

Complete the workspace name and business details.

4

Open Workspace Settings to finish branding and integrations.

Workspace branding and images

Profile and workspace images are used in key parts of the app so your workspace feels recognizable and polished.

Keep workspace branding current before launching new campaigns so preview screens and operational views stay aligned with the business you are launching for.

Templates

How templates, categories, and industries work

Templates are designed to reduce setup friction by giving each campaign a head start based on business type, offer, and ad format.

Updated June 2026

5 min read

What templates do

Templates give you a starting point for campaign setup so you are not building the entire structure from scratch. They help shape copy, positioning, offer framing, and launch flow defaults.

Instead of treating templates as decoration, SideKick uses them as an operational starting point for real launch work.

How categories and industries affect template selection

Industries and categories help narrow the right campaign structure for the kind of business you are running. This keeps the template library easier to browse and makes it more likely that the starting point already fits the business.

A service business, local offer, and lead-generation flow should not look the same as a direct e-commerce promotion, so categories and industries help SideKick organize those differences clearly.

Industry narrows the business context

Category helps group similar campaign types

Template content reflects both the offer and launch style

How to choose the right template

Look for the template that matches the offer and desired response. If you want a lead submission, choose a template built for Lead Form or Landing Page behavior. If the goal is phone calls, use a Call Now structure instead.

The best template is the one that matches the real user action you want after the ad is clicked.

1

Choose the industry that best matches the business.

2

Review the available template options.

3

Check the ad type and CTA behavior before launching.

4

Open the template and confirm the campaign flow matches your goal.

Campaign Launch

How to launch a campaign in SideKick

Campaign launch in SideKick starts from a template and moves through preview, setup, and publishing without requiring you to assemble the entire system manually.

Updated June 2026

6 min read

Before you launch

Make sure your workspace has the right brand identity, connected Meta account, and the CRM destinations you want ready for handoff if you are launching a Meta Lead Form campaign.

If Meta assets or CRM connections are missing, finish that setup first so you do not need to stop mid-launch.

The launch flow

Launch starts from a template and moves through the setup flow for that specific campaign. You will review the campaign structure, preview the creative direction, and confirm any account-linked details before the campaign goes live.

1

Open the template you want to use.

2

Create a new campaign from that template.

3

Review campaign details and preview content.

4

Confirm the ad type and response path.

5

Connect or confirm required Meta assets.

6

Publish the campaign.

What happens after publish

After publish, the campaign moves into the campaign management and performance part of the workflow. You can review its state, see recent activity, and monitor reporting from the Performance area.

For Lead Form campaigns, SideKick can also begin capturing and handing off leads to your connected CRM destinations as new submissions arrive.

Still stuck after reading?

Campaign Launch

How ad types work in SideKick

Different ad types create different response flows, so it is important to choose the one that matches the real next step you want from the prospect.

Updated June 2026

6 min read

Lead Form

Lead Form campaigns keep the submission inside Meta. They are often the fastest path to capturing structured lead details without sending the user to an external page.

This is the campaign type that currently uses SideKick's CRM handoff flow for automated delivery into connected CRM providers.

Landing Page

Landing Page campaigns send the prospect to a page experience outside the in-platform Meta form flow. This is useful when you need more explanation, richer brand presentation, or a different conversion experience.

Call Now

Call Now is best when a live conversation is the primary conversion action. It reduces the path from impression to phone call and usually fits high-intent service businesses.

Messenger

Messenger-based campaigns are designed for conversation-first response paths. They can help when the offer benefits from lightweight back-and-forth before a prospect is ready to convert.

How to choose the right type

The correct ad type depends on the action you want next. If you want structured lead capture inside Meta and CRM handoff, use Lead Form. If you need a fuller page experience, use Landing Page. If you need immediate phone contact, use Call Now. If a messaging conversation is the best fit, use Messenger.

Campaign Management

How campaign previews, statuses, pause, and resume work

SideKick keeps campaign operations focused by clearly separating previewing, launch state, and performance monitoring.

Updated June 2026

5 min read

What campaign previews show

Campaign previews help you understand what the campaign is meant to look and feel like before it goes live. They are designed to make launch decisions easier and faster, especially when working from templates.

Use previews to confirm the creative direction, offer framing, CTA path, and overall fit before you publish or update a campaign.

Common campaign states

Campaigns can move through draft, in review, active, paused, archived, or other lifecycle states depending on where they are in the launch process.

The state is meant to help you understand whether the campaign is still being prepared, already live, temporarily paused, or no longer active.

Draft: not yet published

In review: still being finalized or reviewed

Active: currently live

Paused: intentionally stopped without removing the campaign

Archived: no longer part of the active operating set

Pause and resume behavior

Pause is useful when you want to temporarily stop activity without losing the structure and history of the campaign.

Resume brings the campaign back into the active operating flow when you are ready to continue.

Performance

How performance reporting works in SideKick

Performance reporting in SideKick is focused on campaign outcomes and delivery visibility, not full CRM lifecycle reporting.

Updated June 2026

5 min read

What the Performance area is for

Performance is where you review campaign results without mixing those views with CRM pipeline management. That keeps the reporting clean and aligned with SideKick's role as a campaign platform.

Use the Performance area to understand how campaigns are behaving, compare launch outcomes, and spot areas that may need optimization.

Metrics you will typically see

Campaign metrics can include spend, clicks, CTR, CPL, leads captured, and campaign-level delivery outcomes depending on the launch path and connected systems.

For Lead Form campaigns, you may also see useful CRM handoff indicators such as delivered or failed delivery counts by provider.

Spend

Clicks

CTR

CPL

Lead volume

CRM delivery outcomes for lead-form handoff

What Performance does not replace

Performance helps you understand marketing outcomes, but it does not replace your CRM for longer-term sales pipeline tracking.

If you need to see whether a lead advanced to later sales stages, use the connected CRM where that process is managed.

How to connect Meta, GoHighLevel, and HubSpot

Integrations are managed at the workspace level so the right business has the right connected accounts and delivery destinations.

Updated June 2026

Where integrations live

Integrations live inside Workspace Settings so account connection feels like workspace configuration instead of a separate operational product area.

This is where you connect Meta, GoHighLevel, and HubSpot and review the current status of those connections.

Meta connection basics

Meta connection is used for campaign launch and asset selection. Once connected, you can review available ad accounts, Pages, and related assets under the Meta section.

If the workspace loses permissions or account access changes, reconnecting Meta refreshes that connection.

GoHighLevel connection basics

GoHighLevel uses a connect flow that feels closer to a standard install or OAuth connection. Once connected, the workspace can deliver eligible lead submissions into that CRM destination.

HubSpot connection basics

HubSpot is also managed as a workspace-level CRM connection. Once connected, SideKick can use that account for CRM handoff on supported lead capture flows.

What to verify after connecting

After connecting an account, confirm the status shows Connected and review any available destination or sync information inside Workspace Settings.

Connection status is Connected

Workspace is the correct one

The CRM should receive eligible Meta Lead Form submissions

Recent sync or delivery activity looks healthy

CRM Handoff

How CRM handoff works for Meta Lead Form campaigns

For Meta Lead Form campaigns, SideKick captures new lead submissions, ties them to the correct workspace and campaign context, and delivers them to all connected CRM providers for that workspace.

Updated June 2026

7 min read

What happens when a lead is submitted

When a Meta Lead Form submission is received, SideKick captures the lead, normalizes the available contact and campaign data, and associates it with the correct workspace and campaign context.

That normalized lead record is then delivered to the connected CRM providers for the workspace.

1

Meta lead is received by webhook or recovery sync.

2

SideKick normalizes the lead fields and campaign context.

3

The workspace's connected CRM providers are identified.

4

SideKick attempts delivery to each connected provider.

5

Delivery success or failure is logged independently per provider.

What lead data is included

The internal delivery model is designed to keep enough context for safe delivery and troubleshooting without turning SideKick into a full CRM record system.

How multi-CRM delivery works

If a workspace has multiple CRM connections, SideKick attempts delivery to all connected CRM providers instead of forcing a single default selection.

A delivery failure in one CRM does not block successful delivery in another. Each provider keeps its own delivery record and retry status.

Retries, failures, and recovery

If delivery fails for a provider, SideKick logs the failure and keeps it retryable. This prevents silent lead loss and makes it easier to recover from temporary provider or auth issues.

Recovery sync and recent delivery status in Workspace Settings help you monitor whether lead-form handoff is working as expected.

Account settings, workspace settings, and images

SideKick separates personal account settings from workspace settings so businesses can keep branding and operating configuration in the right place.

Updated June 2026

Profile settings

Profile settings are for your personal account details such as name and profile image. These appear in account-level parts of the app.

Workspace settings

Workspace settings are for business identity and workspace-level configuration such as branding, connected accounts, and CRM handoff behavior.

Use workspace settings when you are updating something that should apply to the business context rather than just your personal profile.

Images and branding

A profile image helps personalize your account, while workspace images and logos help the business stay recognizable across previews and operational views.

Keep these updated before major campaign activity so previews and settings reflect the current business identity.

Billing and account housekeeping

If billing or account access needs attention, keep those requests clearly separated from campaign troubleshooting when opening a support ticket. That helps the SideKick team route the request faster.

Support tickets, common issues, and troubleshooting steps

Support inside SideKick is designed to stay simple for users while still giving the team enough workspace context to help quickly.

Updated June 2026

How support tickets work

You can open a ticket from the support area and continue the conversation in a threaded view. Ticket submissions include useful workspace context so the SideKick team can understand where the request came from.

Support tickets are best for product issues, setup questions, CRM handoff questions, and launch-related troubleshooting.

Common issues to check first

Before opening a ticket, confirm that the correct workspace is active and that key connected accounts still show Connected inside Workspace Settings.

Meta connection needs reconnect

CRM account shows disconnected or expired

The wrong workspace is active

A campaign is still draft instead of live

Lead-form handoff needs a retry after a provider error

Best information to include in a ticket

A short subject, the correct category, the urgency level, and a clear description of what you expected versus what happened will usually speed up support the most.

1

Say what action you were taking.

2

Say what you expected to happen.

3

Say what happened instead.

4

Mention the campaign, workspace, or integration involved.

When to use email support

If you need to contact the team outside the app or want to send a quick message directly, email support is still a useful option. Tickets are better when you want a tracked thread tied to the workspace context.

Still stuck after reading?

Open a support ticket

and the team will pick it up.

Updated June 2026

4 min read

Does SideKick replace my CRM?

No. SideKick is designed as a campaign platform. External CRMs such as GoHighLevel and HubSpot handle long-term lead management.

Can one workspace send leads to more than one CRM?

Yes. For supported Meta Lead Form flows, SideKick can send eligible leads to all connected CRM providers for that workspace.

Where do I connect Meta and my CRM accounts?

Connected accounts live in Workspace Settings so setup stays tied to the correct workspace.

Which campaign types currently use CRM handoff?

The current automated CRM handoff flow is built for Meta Lead Form campaigns.

Where do I get help?

You can browse the Academy, open a support ticket, or email support directly depending on what you need.

Still stuck after reading?

Proven structure

Faster launch

Cleaner messaging

Sharper setup

Start with a structure that already makes sense for paid traffic.

Cleaner campaigns

Keep the campaign message tighter from ad to landing experience.

Less drag

Reduce the usual back-and-forth that slows launch down.

From campaign idea to launch, kept simple

SideKick gives you a cleaner ad launch path instead of piecing together separate campaign assets by hand.

1

Choose the offer

Pick the service or promotion you want to push.

2

Align the campaign

Match the offer to a ready-to-go template and page structure.

3

Launch from one flow

Launch from one connected system instead of patching tools together.

Inside the ads workflow

The ads side of SideKick is built to remove setup friction without turning the product into an ad manager clone.

Offer-backed ad structure

Cleaner campaign page handoff

Built-in lead path

Simple next-step flow

Focused pages

Simpler forms

Fewer drop-offs

Mobile-first

Pages are built to keep the visitor focused on the next step.

Clear next step

Forms stay light enough for real small-business traffic.

Less drop-off

A cleaner path helps fewer leads get lost before they inquire.

Turn attention into a real inquiry

Lead capture should feel like part of the launch flow, not a separate conversion tool glued on top.

1

Campaign page opens

The campaign page is aligned to the offer the visitor clicked on.

2

Visitor submits inquiry

The form keeps the next step clear and simple.

3

Lead is captured inside SideKick

The lead lands inside the same system so you can act on it quickly.

What the capture flow includes

Lead capture is built into the SideKick system so the handoff into lead management stays clean.

Lead list

Status updates

Cleaner pipeline

One place

Keep incoming leads in the same system as the launch flow.

Clear statuses

Use simple statuses to see what needs action next.

Less tool switching

Reduce the usual tool switching that slows response time down.

A simpler way to keep leads organized

SideKick makes the lead list part of the product itself, so the next step stays close to the original campaign.

1

Leads come in

New inquiries show up in the platform right away.

2

Status stays visible

Statuses help you see what is new, contacted, or moving forward.

3

Next action is easier to manage

The lead stays connected to the campaign that brought it in.

Inside the lead workspace

Lead management is intentionally simple so small teams can act without getting buried in CRM complexity.

Faster replies

Cleaner outreach

Less drop-off

Quicker response

Keep the first response close to the lead instead of buried in another system.

Cleaner outreach

Make it easier for a small business to keep momentum after inquiry.

Less chasing

Reduce the manual chasing that often causes leads to cool off.

Keep the next step tied to the lead

Outreach should feel like the natural next step after lead capture, not a messy handoff into another tool.

1

Lead arrives

The lead comes into the same system that launched the campaign.

2

Follow-up starts

SideKick supports the next outreach step without extra patchwork.

3

Conversation keeps moving

The conversation keeps moving from a clearer workflow.

Inside the outreach flow

Follow-up stays intentionally lightweight so small businesses can act quickly without enterprise workflow clutter.

Meta lead form → SideKick → email alerts, CSV export, and your CRM.

Meta/Facebook ready

Core connections

Cleaner stack

Cleaner handoff

Connect the tools you need without blowing up the simplicity of the product.

Fewer fragments

Keep launch, leads, and outreach tied together instead of split across disconnected tools.

Future-ready

Leave room to grow later without making version one feel heavy.

Connect the workflow, not just the tools

Integrations should support the SideKick flow, not distract from it. That means fewer connectors, but better handoffs.

1

Connect Meta/Facebook

Use connected sources for the campaigns you want to launch.

2

Keep leads inside SideKick

Keep the lead and outreach path inside the platform where it stays easier to manage.

3

Expand when needed

Add more integrations later without turning the workflow into a maze.

What the connected setup supports

SideKick keeps the integrations list focused so the product still feels like one system instead of a connector catalog.
